ALBUQUERQUE BOY HELPED EXCAVATE PETRIFIED BONES

Kenneth Head Assisted Professor W. K. Gregory of Yale in Securing Valuable Prehistoric Ruins.

Roswell Head, son of Rev. and Mrs. Head of Albuquerque, left this morning for Colorado Springs, where he will resume his studies in college, in which institution he will receive a degree of mining engineer next June. Mr. Head recently returned from the Navajo Indian reservation, where he spent three months assisting Prof. W. K. Gregory of Yale university in prospecting for water and in doing research work on the description of the interior. Prof. Gregory and Mr. Head were unusually successful in excavation work and secured some hundred pounds of petrified bones of prehistoric animals. Many of the specimens were found embedded in the sand rock and extremely recovered after difficult work with pick and shovel. Other among the finds made were several vertebrae of the elephant a number of teeth which exhibited many thousands of years ago.

Before leaving for Colorado today Mr. Head shipped by express some pounds of the valuable bones to the department of the interior, Washington. The exhibits will be placed in the national museum there. A detailed report of the research work will be made to the authorities in Washington which will be published in the near future.

Yesterday Mr. Head is a star football player and has worked for two years as full back for the Colorado Canyon. He is a candidate for that position this year, with good prospects for winning out and will probably participate in all the games called for by the schedule, notably one with Wisconsin.

The president will leave Erie at 11:45 a. m. Monday. He will deliver an address Saturday night.

It is estimated that between 16,000 and 20,000 railroad men will be directly concerned and engaged in handling the presidential party.
